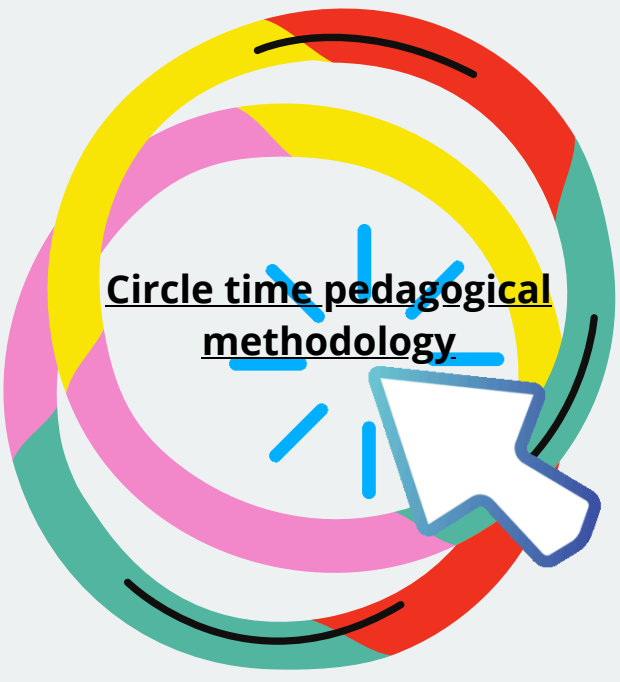
Inclusive Education

The importance of 3 factors in an inclusive pedagogical process: INCLUSION, PARTICIPATION and RESPONSIBILITY of the Adult Educator or future Edupreneur



Circle time pedagogical methodology

Didactics as a knowledge-based discipline which involves the descriptive and rational study of all teaching-related activities before, during and after the teaching of content in the classroom, must integrate new experiences and find innovative methodologies for teaching.

Universal Design for Learning and the concept of Democracy

The UDL is an approach to design, develop, and deliver content, used to create inclusive and accessible learning environments and to ensure inclusion in teaching and learning processes.
The classroom is a democratic micro society in which no one should be left out.

Inclusive education is an effective way to provide all students an equal chance to go to the same school, learn, and develop the skills they need to succeed in life (IIEP-UNESCO, 2019).
In inclusive education systems 'learning methods and educational materials that address the needs of all students are mainstreamed into the system so that barriers that potentially limit participation are removed.
Disability is just one cause of exclusion, among other social, physical, and institutional limitations.'
